

What Should I Do After a Work Accident?

If you are injured at work, there are several steps you can take protect your rights as well as your health

- Seek medical help. Getting medical attention immediately after the accident is crucial. If your injuries are severe, call 911 or ask someone nearby to do so. Otherwise, your employer should allow you to leave work so you can seek medical care. Your company may have a list of approved doctors you must see for treatment.
- Report the injury. It is important to report the injury to your employer as soon as possible after the accident. You must tell your supervisor about the incident to document the date and circumstances for future claims and legal proceedings.
- Keep all records. Maintain all medical records, related reports, and bills accumulated because of your injury, including those for doctor visits, medical tests, and procedures. This will help preserve a record of treatment and expenses incurred if there is a problem later.
- Gather evidence. Do your best to take pictures of the accident site and your injuries, and obtain a copy of your timecard and any other evidence that proves that you were working at the time of the accident. An experienced attorney can assist you with this step of the process.

PRODUCTS LIABILITY

CPSC Rules That Amazon Must Pay for Defective Products from Third-Party Sellers

Recently, the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) voted unanimously to declare Amazon as the "distributor" of hundreds of thousands of dangerous and defective products sold by third-party sellers across the multi-billion-dollar company's platform. The CPSC's ruling means that Amazon is legally responsible for distributing a variety of recalled products that endanger consumers - some even putting them at considerable risk for serious injury or death.

READ OUR FIVE STAR REVIEW

"Words cannot express how grateful I am for the work and care that Farhan Ali put into my case. Farhan was attentive, thoughtful, and the perfect person to work with during a very difficult time in my life. He was beyond patient with all of my questions and he kept me updated on every stage in my case without me having to reach out myself. One of the aspects I most appreciate was Farhan's willingness to take the time to clearly explain all of the facets of my case in a way that was easy for me to understand. I cannot recommend him highly enough; he sets the gold standard for personal injury services. I would recommend Farhan and the whole team at Galfand Berger."
